

STANDARD TIME THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Compiled by the National Bureau of Standards

Standard time for the world, like longitude, is counted from Greenwich, England, as the prime meridian. Places to the east of Greenwich have faster time than Greenwich, while places to the west have slower time. The world is divided into time zones of approximately 15° for every hour. Since Greenwich is in the 0 zone, the number of any zone, if added or subtracted to the time in Greenwich, will give the corresponding time in that particular zone.

Not all countries follow the International Time Zone System, but some use the time of some principal city as a standard and others have no standard time. The different time zones of the world are numbered east and west of Greenwich. The zone number when added or subtracted, as shown in the following table, from the time of the zone gives the corresponding Greenwich time. Thus zones to the east have faster time than Greenwich and are indicated as minus (—), while those to the west have slower time and are indicated as plus (+).
